The county of the Amour, an extent of 9,200 square miles, has been annexed under the present reign. The surrender of Schamyl pacified some provisces, which may consequently be considered as having been added to the Russian territory. The population of the empire has increased in an equal proportion. In 1722, it was 14 millions; in 1803, 36 millions; in 1829, 50 millions; and at present it amounts to 65 millions.

Carl Schwar says in a letter to his New York friends:

"Neither the success of our arms nor the state of our finances is such that the people of the North may indulge in internal discensions with impunity. There are only two parties which at the present time can logically exist: case faithfully following the lead of the National Administration, and giving an active support to all its measures against the Reballion, and the other going ahead of the Government, calling out and inspiring the way for the measure which in the future, the Government, will be obliged to adopt. Every loyal man must belong to one of these two. They differ only by the degree of their patriotism, by the intensity of their zeal, by the sages ity and foresight with which they judge the necessities of our situation. There is no third programme possible, nuless it rests upon open or secret sympathy with the Rebellion."

"A friend who witnessed the battle of Antietam, and remained in that region for some days attending to the wounded, states that he found a Georgia conscript on the field mortally wounded. His only clothing was a shirt tern in shreds, and a pair of trousers out at the knees and seat. The kind attentions he received from our hands, caused him to give his name and some interesting particulars. 'I am,' said the wounded man, 'a Georgian by birth. I sold my cotton in 1860 for $5,300. I have a wife and four children at home. I am a Union man. They pressed me into the army. I am dying. I have never fired a gun at the stars sud stripes."

The Boarse Gazette of St. Petersburg has the following remarks on the progressive increase of the Russian Empire:

The the time of John III—that is to say, in the second half of the 18th century—it only occupied a surface of 18,000 square miles. In the reign of Alexia Mikchailowich, in 1630, itaextest had already reached 237,000; under Catherine II, 335,000; and under the present reign 392,000 miles.—The result is that the most considerable increase took place under Peter the Great and Catherine. The former conquered a part of Finland, the Dagbestan, and some oliter Caucasian provinces, and the country of the Kirgbisee, and also annexed to the empire Kamscatka and some islands in the Pacific Ocean. Strong Characters.

Strongth of character consists of two things—power of will and power of self-restraint. It requires two things, therefore, sky flushed and glowed with the dawning for its existance—feelings, and strong command of them. Now it is here we make a beatmen knelt on the rosy deck and adored strength of a man by the power of the feelings he subdues, not by the power of those which subdue him. And hence composure which subdue him. And hence composure is very often the highest result of strength.

May the task have been he has his will obeyed, and his own way in all things, we call him a strong man. The the steward deal kindly with the laborer,—truth is, that he is the weak man; it is his Thackeray.

Did we never see a man receive a flag-rant insult and only grow a little pale, and then reply quietty? That is a man spiritually strong. Or did we never see a man in anguish stand, as if carved out of solid rock, mastering himself? Or one bearing a hopelessly daily trial remain silent, and never tell the world what cankered his home peace? That is strongth. He who, with strong passions, remaines chaste; he who, keenly sensitive, with manly powers of indignation in him, can be provoked and yet restrain himself, and forgive—these are the strong men, the spiritual heroes.—Rev.
